A meeting of times past and times present

Bonalgue is the result of generations of work. Bearing testament to this is the captain of Napoleon's army who housed the arms of his regiment here, or the little girl who lived here before World War 1 and who wrote the moving words, 'I leave to you all my memories of dear Bonalgue, witness to the happiest days of my life. There is here, under the shade of the Lebannon cedar trees, a magic that resonates through the people, and the wines.'

Land of freedom, legendary terroir

Ever since the French Revolution, the 'Stones of Bonalgue' have given - on this beautiful Pomerol terroir - a striking maturity to the grapes that grow here. The techniques may have changed but the spirit stays the same... and since 1926, the Bourotte family has enjoyed the freedom to work on this land unencumbered, paying tribute to the past, and to the rewards of a job well done.

Personality and charm

It's the maturity of the grapes at harvest that is the key to Bonalgue's great charm. Its personality: an early terroir, fully ripe grapes, the silky, velvety Merlot, and a strikingly aromatic nose. Harvesters, cellar workers, vineyard managers and owners; we are all attempting, year after year, to fully respect these much loved attributes of our wine.
